CHARACTERISTICS OF THE LOW-INCOME POPULATION: 1973 (Advance report)

About 23 million persons were below the low-income level in 1973 comprising 11 percent of the United States population, according to the results of the Current Population Survey (CPS) conducted in March 1974 by the Bureau of the Census. This figure is 1.5 million or 6.1 percent below the 1972 figure. There were about 4.8 million families and 4.7 million unrelated individuals (persons living alone or with nonrelatives) below the low-income level in 1973. Both of these figures were below the 1972 levels.

In 1973, the low-income or poverty threshold--the income level which separates "poor" from "nonpoor"--was $4,540 for a nonfarm family of four; it was $4,275 in 1972, and $2,973 in 1959, the first year for which data on the low-income population are available.<sup>1</sup> These thresholds are updated every year to reflect changes in the Consumer Price Index (CPI).

The number of low-income white persons continued to decline between 1972 and 1973. The number of low-income blacks was 7.4 million in 1973, about the same as in 1971; it was 7.7 million in 1972. Although it is probable that the number of low-income blacks changed during the period, sampling variation obscures the picture. About 8 percent of white persons and 31 percent of black persons were below the poverty level in 1973.

The number of low-income aged persons (65 years and over) declined by 10 percent between 1972 and 1973, a continuation of the decrease observed during the 1971-72 period. This decline reflects substantial increases in Social Security benefits enacted since 1970.

The sex of the family head continues to be an important factor in the low-income status of families as evidenced by the fact that the number of low-income families with a male head declined sharply between 1959 and 1973, while there was a 14 percent increase in the number of low-income families headed by a female. Thus, families headed by women have become a greater proportion of all low-income families--23 percent in 1959, 43 percent in 1972, and 45 percent in 1973. The comparable proportions for families above the low-income level were 7 percent in 1959 and 9 percent in both 1972 and 1973. There was no change in the proportion of low-income black families headed by a woman between 1972 and 1973, while the comparable proportion for white families increased.

There are significant differences in the composition of the white and black low-income groups. In 1973, as in previous years, families headed by women accounted for a greater proportion of low-income black families than of low-income white families (64 percent compared to 37 percent). Persons 65 years and over comprised a larger proportion of the low-income white population in 1973 than of the low-income black population, whereas the reverse relationship was true for children under 18 years.

The 1973 statistics presented in this report were obtained from the Census Bureau's Current Population Survey of March 1974. The information was collected from the civilian noninstitutional population and members of the Armed Forces living off post or with their families on post in the United States. Unrelated individuals under 14 years of age are also excluded from this report. More detailed data on the low-income population will appear in a report in this series to be issued later this year.

Low-income (poverty) definition. Families and unrelated individuals are classified as being above or below the low-income level using the poverty index adopted by a Federal Interagency Committee in 1969. This index is based on the Department of Agriculture's 1961 Economy Food Plan and reflects the different consumption requirements of families based on their size and composition, sex and age of the family head, and farm-nonfarm residence. The poverty thresholds were originally updated based on changes in the average per capita cost of the food in the economy food plan. During the 1960's, the cost of the economy food plan did not increase as much as the overall cost of living. Thus, general price changes since 1959 were not paralleled by comparable changes in the poverty thresholds. As a result of deliberations of the Federal Interagency Committee in 1969, it was decided that annual adjustments in the low-income thresholds would be based on changes in the Consumer Price Index (CPI) rather than on changes in the cost of food included in the economy food plan. However, between 1972 and 1973, this trend was reversed; the cost of foods in the economy food plan increased considerably more than the CPI. Thus, it should be noted that changes in the CPI may not be entirely reflective of changes in the "cost of living" for the poor during this period.

In analyzing data on the low-income population, the following limitations should be noted. The low-income concept has been developed in order to identify, in dollar terms, a minimum level of income adequacy for families of different types in keeping with American consumption patterns. Based on an analysis of the percent of income devoted to food expenditures, an estimate was developed of the minimum cost at which an American family, making average choices, can be provided with a diet meeting recommended nutritional goals. Consequently, it is an overall statistical yardstick which reflects the different consumption requirements of families of different size, taking into account family composition and farm-nonfarm residence. Insofar as individual circumstances or consumption patterns differ, the dollar value of the low-income threshold for a given family size may not represent the money income required by an individual family to maintain a level of economic well-being equivalent to other families with similar incomes.

Limitations of the income data. Data on income collected in the CPS are limited to money income received before payments for personal income taxes, and deductions for Social Security, union dues, Medicare, etc. Money income is the sum of the amounts received from earnings; Social Security and public assistance payments; dividends, interest, and rent; unemployment and workmen's compensation; government and private employee pensions; and other periodic income. (Certain money receipts such as capital gains are not included.) Therefore, money income does not reflect the fact that many families receive part of their income in the form of nonmoney transfers such as food stamps, health benefits, and subsidized housing; that many farm families receive nonmoney income in the form of rent-free housing and goods produced and consumed on the farm; or that nonmoney incomes are also received by some nonfarm residents which often take the form of the use of business transportation and facilities, full or partial payments by business for retirement programs, medical and educational expenses, etc. These elements should be considered when comparing income levels. Moreover, readers should be aware that for many different reasons there is a tendency in household surveys for respondents to underreport their income. Underreporting is especially pronounced for income sources that are not derived from earnings, such as Social Security, public assistance, and net income from interest, dividends, rentals, etc. Overall, income earned from wages or salary is much better reported than other sources of income and is nearly equal to independently derived benchmark estimates. By contrast, recent CPS income data on Social Security and public assistance payments to beneficiaries have averaged approximately 84 and 73 percent, respectively, of their benchmark estimates.

In the March 1974 Current Population Survey (CPS) of the Bureau of the Census, approximately 47,000 households were eligible for interview. Of this number, 2,000 occupied units, on the average, were visited, but interviews were not obtained because the occupants were not found at home after repeated calls or were unavailable for some other reason. In order to obtain more reliable data for the Spanish origin population, the March CPS sample was enlarged to include all households from the November 1973 sample which contained at least one person of Spanish origin. Since the estimates in this report are based on a sample, they are subject to sampling variability. Moreover, as in all field surveys of income, the figures are subject to errors of response and nonreporting. All statements of comparison appearing in the text are significant at a 1.6 standard error level or better. Most are significant at a level of more than 2.0 standard errors. Thus, for most differences cited in the text, the estimated difference is greater than twice the standard error of the difference. This means that the chances are at least 19 in 20 that a difference identified in the text indicates a true difference in the population rather than the chance variations arising from the use of samples. Statements of comparison qualified in some way (e.g., by use of the phrase "some evidence") have a level of significance between 1.6 and 2.0 standard errors. For further details, see Current Population Reports Series P-60, No. 91, "Characteristics of the Low-Income Population: 1972."
